Community labs transition from APL to DynaLIFE

LETHBRIDGE – Today, community lab services in Lethbridge, Brooks and Medicine Hat have transitioned from Alberta Precision Laboratories (APL) to DynaLIFE Medical Labs.

This change, aimed at improving lab services for Albertans and generating savings, is the second phase of the provincial transition of lab services. Labs in the North, Edmonton, Central and Calgary zones of Alberta Health Services (AHS) transitioned to DynaLIFE this past December.

“Contracting community lab services to DynaLIFE will ensure Albertans have timely access to high-quality community lab services, while generating cost savings and redirecting healthcare dollars into other important health services,” says Jason Copping, Minister of Health. “DynaLIFE has a proven history of providing innovative lab services and Albertans can be assured they are getting the best care possible.”

About two-thirds of provincial lab work, or 50 million tests per year, is generated from the community and will be delivered by DynaLIFE under contract to AHS. The contract includes operating community labs and mobile collection facilities in cities and communities with more than 25,000 collections per year.

In Brooks, Lethbridge and Medicine Hat, APL in-hospital laboratories will continue to serve patients who have a requisition generated at a hospital or urgent care site, either through inpatient, emergency or ambulatory clinics. Hospital labs in rural areas of the AHS South Zone that do not have additional community labs will continue to serve rural community clients.

“This expanded partnership with DynaLIFE will not only see investments in community lab facilities and technology, but will continue to drive and support the health innovation ecosystem in Alberta,” says Mauro Chies, interim AHS President and CEO. “The transition of community services to DynaLIFE will ensure hospital labs, operated by APL, are able to focus on the emergency, inpatient and urgent needs of acute and ambulatory hospital patients.”

DynaLIFE has built additional capacity in both Calgary and Edmonton, which will enable an increased volume of tests to be processed every day, and support a provincial testing model. New community labs are opening in many communities across the province, including two in Lethbridge opening today. “DynaLIFE is always looking for new ways to serve the province we love, so we’re excited for this next stage in our journey,” says DynaLIFE CEO Jason Pincock. “Providing community and non-urgent hospital lab services throughout the province will allow DynaLIFE to bring world-class testing facilities and patient-centred focus to new locations, ensuring stability, reliability and excellence for the diagnostic industry, and paving the way for greater innovation and new industry partnerships.”
